

About the Long-Term Plan Review (LTPR) and the public engagement exercise

The Long-Term Plan Review (LTPR) is the Government's latest review of Singapore's long-term land use plans, which guide development over the next 50 years and beyond. A review is conducted every 10 years to safeguard land for a quality living environment, based on evolving trends and changing demands.

Our long-term plans have shaped Singaporeans' living environment and the way we live, work, learn and play over the last 50 years. The LTPR is an opportunity to put Singaporeans at the centre of our plans, by involving them to reimagine and chart Singapore's future together.

In the LTPR public engagement exercise, URA and relevant agencies will be reaching out to Singaporeans through a wide variety of platforms, to gather their ideas, views and insights concerning Singapore's future, and discuss issues relating to our living environment. The exercise will run from July 2021 to June 2022, and consists of four phases:

- Phase 1 (17 July 2021 to September 2021): We will engage Singaporeans through platforms such as online polls and workshops, to understand their hopes, aspirations and concerns for Singapore's future, as well as discuss factors that make a good living environment. Feedback collected will contribute towards shaping a collective vision and shared values for the LTPR, and the development of our long-term plans and strategies.
- Phase 2 (October 2021 to December 2021): We will invite the public to participate in facilitated discussions to discuss possible land use strategies to achieve the LTPR's vision and shared values, and address trends and developments that Singapore could face in the future. We will also engage Singaporeans to gather insights on how we should plan our future city, such as housing towns, workplaces, the city centre, green and recreational spaces as well as familiar places.
- Phase 3 (January 2022 to March 2022): We will involve the public in further conversations on the set of possible land use strategies developed in Phase 2, and the opportunities and implications they present. This will be done through various platforms, including townhall sessions.
- Phase 4 (April 2022 to June 2022): We will present the long-term land use plans and strategies developed based on the public's feedback and ideas from earlier phases.

Throughout the LTPR, we will also consolidate relevant feedback from other conversations, such as the recently concluded Emerging Stronger Conversations and ongoing Singapore Green Plan, to develop Singapore's long-term land use plans and strategies.

The LTPR is expected to be completed in 2022. The resultant plans and strategies will guide Singapore's long-term development, including the next Master Plan review in 2024. In the nearer-term, as part of Singapore Together, URA and relevant agencies will also partner the public and stakeholders to explore ideas and solutions to implement some of these plans and strategies, to progressively realise our collective vision and values for our living environment.
